Mrs. Brown seated in an arm chair. Room arranged for the reception of guests. Mrs. Brown. It is a sad fate which keeps me here, and debars me of that privilege, so dear to a mothers heart, of witnessing the happiness of my dear son, my boy Frederick, who this day leads to the altar, one who is already dear to mo as a daughter. Enter Jephtha. Well, Jephtha, you seem to have a heavy load there. Jephtha. [Putting down a tremendous wedding cake, and displaying a number of extremely large favors.] Heavy load! well I reckon the size of that er weddin cakes not to be come at every day. And as these ere dandy jumpers, its not the weight so much as the orders Ive got not to muss em. Mrs. B. But what are you going to do with them all, Jephtha? Jephtha. Why, ye see the gals was...
