Take the equation ma: --nx=a, our formula stands thus: x= 4am+n +n This expression may be employed to advantage in 2m equations, in which the common method of completing the square would involve troublesome fractions; e. g., 5a-)-lla;=42, by our formula, a-Ai H5!l=2 or 4. After performing a few examples by means of this formula, the scholar will become so familiar with it as to apply it in any instance. The common rule for completing the square after arranging the terms, is to add to both members of the equation...
