On the death of Mr. Pitt in 1806, Lord i Ellenborough, according to established j custom, held the seal of chancellor of the Exchequer till the new ministry was appointed. By that ministry, composed of the whiffs and a few of Lord Sidmouths friends, he was offered and refused the Great Seal, but by unadvisedly accepting a seat in the cabinet, subjected himself, as Lord Mansfield had done before him, to the suspicions which must attach to one who at the same time holds a political and a judicial position. However honourably and independently the individual may act, there is so palpable an indecorum in the connection between the two that it is to be hoped no further example will revive the controversy. His adherence to tho whigs lasted only till the ministry expired. Thenceforward he disconnected himself from party, though all his...
