Excerpt: . . . our property in His service, and in promoting our reception into everlasting habitations. It is the serving of mammon which chiefly prevents our using it justly, and to the glory of God. Perhaps some of our Lords hearers might have been silently thinking that it might be possible to be truly His disciples, even if the precepts of the foregoing parable were not so literally followed: He, therefore, declares the impossibility of uniting things opposed both in motive and principle. It is self-evident that the faithfulness commended, vers. 10-13, is at the same time the best manifestation of the wisdom to which we are exhorted, vers. 1-9; and that the whole of this instruction thus deserves to be regarded as one connected discourse. DOCTRINAL REFLECTIONS. 1. If the parable of the unjust steward, independently considered, has been a XIOos irpoaic6fifiaros to many expositors, it becomes, when viewed in its true historical connection, a striking proof of the Lords aptness to teach. This is especially shown, when we remember that this instruction was uttered in the presence of Judas, who bare the bag, and to whom this exhortation to faithfulness iv aXKorplc o was one of special significance. He was here indirectly, but clearly, warned that continuance in the way of dishonesty must end in the entire loss of his apostleship, and of his own soul. At the same time, it is worthy of notice, that this entire representation was eminently adapted to the wants of...
