But claiming a secret or mysteriously superior treatment, for sale at an exorbitant price, is quackery pure and simple. It may be true that the teachers in our medical colleges do not sufficiently appreciate the needs of the general practitioner when he is at home in his own field of practice, far away from hospitals and many helpful accessories. Particularly should the teachers in post graduate courses teach their practitioner-students how to accomplish the best results with the aids in reach in their fields of practice at home, rather than make vain-glorious displays of rare and difficult surgery which a general practitioner could not attempt at home. My Dear Doctor: --Please excuse my delay in attending to this matter, having nearly completed my four score years as the comic song has it, I m not as young as I...
